Inward facing principles	Principle 1: Whole	Notes / Evidence	Working in a way that focuses on manageable parts via functional activities and projects.				Building business direction around mission and purposful intentions and goal setting for the business.				When we begin from the perspective of a whole, it presents itself to our minds as singular, as just what it is. Keep all organizational members linked to their effect on wholes.				0

	Principle 2: Potential	Notes / Evidence	Working on solving problems in response to existing systems, operations and markets.				Attention to social and ecological challenges with special attention to climate change and carbon footprint. Doing less harm and doing good.				Between what is enduring and what is changing, there is always new potential that can be discovered, developed, and realized for every whole in every situation. Seeking disruptive, more fulfilling and beneficial outcomes.				0

Principle 3: Essence	Notes / Evidence	Differentiation is framed by positioning offerings relative to competitive firms in the marketplace.				Brand building and outreach to internal and external stakeholders to find sustainable solutions in markets.				Working from the irreducible core of something that makes it singularly what it is. How it would no longer be itself if you were to remove this core. Working as "one of one" by increasingly bringing forth essence and non-displaceable uniqueness.				0

Externally facing principles	Principle 5: Nested	Notes / Evidence	Success defined by direct value exchange with customers and contractual agreements with suppliers.				Collaborating with customers and other stakeholders where overlapping benefits can occur.				Working with an understanding of embeddedness within greater and lesser systems, each playing a core role in the success of the whole and other nested wholes.				0
		Score													0
	Principle 6: Nodal	Notes / Evidence	Strategic activities are distributed broadly across the market resetting priorities regularly.				Leveraged endeavors are pursued to increase the return on energy and time expended.				Idintiyng the keys to a system and concetrating on a single concept or intervention with the potential for transforming the whole of a system, effectively for systemic regeneration.				0
